“Today, President Biden has the opportunity to highlight to the American people some of the critical and innovative transportation programs included in the historic Bipartisan Infrastructure Law (BIL) that he signed last November,” said David Straus, Executive Director of the Association for Commuter Transportation (ACT). “On behalf of ACT and the entire Transportation Demand Management (TDM) community, I look forward to more Americans learning about exciting BIL programs such as the Congestion Relief Program and Carbon Reduction Program, to name a few, and continue to support the President and Congressional efforts to move a climate focused reconciliation bill that promotes a more efficient, safe, and healthy U.S. transportation system for all people.”

ABOUT ACT

The Association for Commuter Transportation is the premier organization and leading advocate for commuter transportation and transportation demand management (TDM) professionals. ACT strives to create an efficient multimodal transportation system by empowering the people, places, and organizations working to advance TDM in order to improve the quality of life of all commuters, enhance the livability of communities, and stimulate economic activity.
